60. Why can some scientists spend their lives in the way of understanding a phenomenon, but can still have no faith in God?

Worshipping God is connected to the will of human beings not to their knowledge. A carpenter who always builds ladders but climbs none of them will reach no height above the ground, because he never intended to go any higher!

A tailor that sews clothing for everyone else may not have clothing themselves. The seller of mirrors can be constantly going around the mirrors of his shop, but not have an ironed collar on his shirt, yet passers-by will neaten up themselves by looking at just one of those mirrors.

Many scientists search for answers to phenomena, but they have no intention of recognising the Creator.
